Awaken Your Space

How does your home perform for you? It's a question we've been asking ourselves a lot over the past year. At Herman Miller, a design company with more than 100 years of expertise, our heads-down research, dogged questioning, and collaboration with designers has generated a fleet of award-winning ergonomic seating and home furnishings with timeless comfort and appeal. Just as each of our designs should perform for you during these challenging times, so should each room of your home.

This spring, we want to help you create the environment you need to thrive—finding focus and intention from the home to home office. Like a houseplant, soaking in the air, water, and sunlight from its environment, we invite you to consider the effect that your spaces have on powering your mind and body. Begin by asking yourself, “What do I want to feel in each room of my home?”

We asked the same question of wellness experts, from yogis to professional organizers to researchers. Their perspectives continually inspire us to generate purpose through form. That's why for us a chair is never just a place to sit, and a dining table is never just a place to eat. We design with performance, beauty, and quality craftsmanship in mind so your home can be the place where you're your best self—whether you seek inspiration, rest, or meaningful connection with your family, roommates, and friends.

Find a new perspective. It's waiting just around the corner—or rather, on the next page.

Invite Mindfulness

Anchor the heart of your home with pieces that inspire moments of reflection (or the occasional nap).

Crosshatch® Chair

Designed by EOOS for Geiger, 2014

The Crosshatch Chair, with gracefully curved wood and cozy cushions, showcases a modern design detail that's quite unexpected for a lounge chair: a latticed suspension back of repurposed parachute cords.

Doubleframe™ Table

Designed by Michael Anastassiades, 2018

Michael Anastassiades's ethos—to pare an object down to its essence—produces beautiful elevated basics, like the all-around versatile Doubleframe Table, a sophisticated reinterpretation of the 1930s Parsons table. A salient example of his meticulous attention to materials and construction, this table makes a seamless addition to any dining area.

Devon, Performance Specialist from our Hudson Yards, New York store.

Mind Your Angle: Laptop users tend to lean forward, missing out on the benefits built into the seatback. If this is how you sit, try a chair with a forward angle so your back is supported even in an active posture.

Material Matters: Our suspension material is ideal for breathability. If overheating isn't a concern for you, foam's cushioning better accommodates a range of sitting poses—legs crossed, folded in a pretzel, and more.

The Two-Finger Rule: A seat that's too deep will dig into your calves, but too shallow and it'll add to physical fatigue. Aim to have a space of two fingers between the seat's edge and the back of your knees.

“Getting back into my body is what has helped me stay sane through all of last year and the start of 2021.

I drink a lot of water, and I love doing our short Sky Ting classes, which consist of quick 10–15 minute flows, to unstick my body and give me a little respite from typing on a computer. Forward folds, rounded plough, hip openers, and gentle pranayama (breathwork) are immensely helpful for me.

I also highly recommend getting outside at least once. Stick to simple things that are accomplishable in your daily routine to create longstanding healthy habits!”

Sacrum = Sacred. Where Back Support Sits.

Did you know back support doesn’t start at the lumbar? It starts at the sacrum. Research shows that the support of the sacral region, the foundation of your spine, is key to aligning the body. It helps the seated body maintain its ideal posture—chest forward, shoulders back, and a slight S-shaped curve to your back—with less strain and fatigue.

All of Herman Miller’s performance seating is engineered with sacral support. To find more ease and comfort in every sit, explore our ergonomic performance seating collection at hermanmiller.com/sit-well.

Purpose Through Design

People First

We want to solve problems for people—from their health and safety all the way to their productivity, comfort, and enjoyment. We call it human-centered problem-solving design. From designer to maker to your home, Herman Miller respects and considers you.

Inheritance Quality

Because we execute original designs to the highest standards of excellence and craft, they retain their splendor, relevance, and iconic value—even years after their purchase.

ABOVE

All our pieces are made with the upmost care. Some even have handmade components, like this latticework on the Crosshatch Chair.

RIGHT

Our Michigan manufacturing facility, aka the GreenHouse, is renowned for its eco-friendly architecture and processes.

Continuous Improvement

We strive to always consider and question our materials, energy use, product life cycle, and manufacturing processes. Our warranty—earned through rigorous industry and proprietary testing—is something we stand behind 100 percent.

12-Year Warranty

Where do you see yourself in 12 years? Wherever you end up, we're confident our performance seating will be there with you. We stand behind every ergonomic chair with a 12-year warranty, free shipping, and 30-day hassle-free return.

Ergonomic Experts at Your Service

We design state-of-the-art chairs that support a range of bodies, postures, and movements. Our Performance Specialists are here to help you find not only the right seat but also a holistic setup for every room—with sit-to-stand desks, lounge chairs, storage, and even the right lighting.
