Eames® Lounge Chair and Ottoman

Designed by Charles and Ray Eames, 1956

Charles and Ray Eames envisioned the Lounge Chair and Ottoman as a fixture in the home and inadvertently created one of the most significant designs of the 20th century—a fixture not only in homes across the world but also in museums and design history books.

Noguchi® Table

Designed by Isamu Noguchi, 1948

World-renowned visionary, artist, and designer Isamu Noguchi believed that “everything is sculpture,” and the Noguchi Table stands as the most compelling proof. A study in equilibrium—part work of art and part functional furniture—Noguchi’s design begs to be the center of attention, with a stunning curved wood base and free-form glass top.

Wilkes Modular Sofa Group Chair

Designed by Ray Wilkes, 1976

With its playful curves and ample comfort, it's no wonder the Wilkes Modular seating has stayed an icon all these decades. We've brought back the original '70s design—complete with injection-molded foam cushions and flexible steel frame. Known as “Chiclet” for its rounded edges, this adaptable seating is available as an armchair, loveseat, or three-seater sofa.

Not sure where to start? Our in-store Performance Specialists are ready to answer all your design and ergonomic questions. We've pulled out some of the frequently asked questions they receive from our customers to help you better understand our performance seating.

You asked: Why do Herman Miller chairs lack a headrest? Two words: the sacrum (found in the lower back). When properly supported, this area at the base of your spine can encourage an active, alert posture—no headrest needed. With sacral support, you'll maintain a healthy and natural S-shaped spine. That said, if you crave more upper back support, you can opt for our taller chairs, such as the Embody or the high-back Cosm.

You asked: What's the right chair for my size, height, and type of work? Our performance seating collection includes seven chairs, each with a unique set of benefits, colors, and materials to match your needs. Aeron comes in three sizes, and Cosm is available in three back heights. Connect with a Performance Specialist for your personalized fitting—in-store or online.

Think Big Picture

As both an avid player and ergonomic pro, a Herman Miller Performance Specialist shares her tips for building a setup for maximum comfort and performance.

“For a complete battlestation, you need to think about the full harmony. Consider the features that connect the chair to the desk to the keyboard. Maybe you need a larger desk to hold all your gear, a softer mousepad to complete the desk, or accessories with RGB lighting for a unified color scheme.”

Giving Plastic Waste New Life

Material innovation has always been a defining part of Herman Miller's design DNA. Now we're leading the movement to divert plastic waste away from our oceans and into our timeless pieces.

Suppliers work with local pickers to scavenge profitable plastics. These raw materials are washed, sorted, and pelletized. Then, they're sold to manufacturers like Herman Miller, where we test and re-engineer the plastic. Finally, this plastic is incorporated into a growing number of our products and packaging.

Sustainability

We believe a small change can make a big difference. For example, the Aeron Chair in Onyx helps divert over 44 metric tons of plastic annually from the ocean—the equivalent of 4.5 million single-use water bottles.*

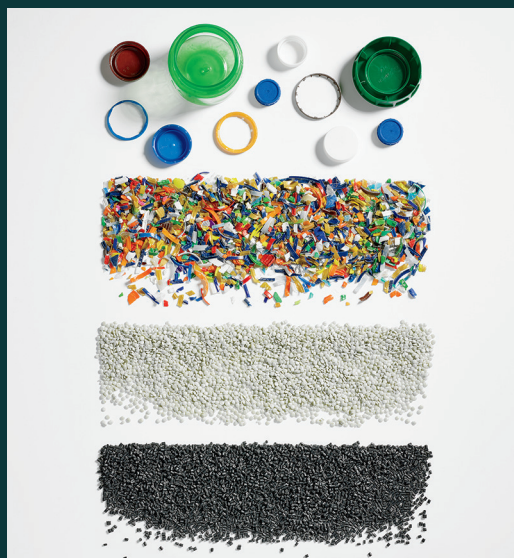

*Based on annual sales forecast.

Innovation

We're starting by re-engineering our best-selling Aeron Chair, but this is just the beginning. As a founding member of NextWave Plastics, Herman Miller is leading the movement to develop the first global network of ocean-bound plastic supply chains.

Supporting Communities

Plastic waste tends to build up in coastal cities that don't have the infrastructure to process it. That's why we're partnering with a local team to turn this plastic into something brand new.

Ergonomic Experts at Your Service

We design state-of-the-art chairs that support a range of bodies, postures, and movements. Our Performance Specialists are here to help you find not only the right seat but also a holistic setup for every room—with sit-to-stand desks, lounge chairs, storage, and even the right lighting.
